Reed Altemus: So one might ask “Why visual poetry? We know the rules of poetry. We know its forms. Why explore beyond these boundaries? Is an expansion of the forms of poetry really necessary? Isn’t that just opening up poetry to chaos and arbitrariness to disregard traditional forms? Why experiment with mis-en-page, typography, visual design etc. why create new forms?” For me there is an answer to these questions and it is that the traditional forms have failed us: they produce the same kinds of social situations as have ever been: we have poverty, wars, corporate imperialism, neocolonialism, racism, religious clashes of all kinds, homophobia, etc. etc what we are talking about when we speak of visual poetry is new forms for a new content.

Make it clear. Shit. But something forbids it, in fact by dwelling on it I know I lose some powers of the present, allowing myself to doubt the authority.
And if I were to try again. And stay away from subject matters. And be abstract. Deal with words as if they were hunks of letters without meaning. I can no more use them as dead things divorced from the blood of our desire and the spirit's rage, than I could see any living thing thus separated. For all lives. In that it partakes of existence.
Whatever that is. I thought then: chance and change. But you see, already I am imposing a conscious order there which Gertrude had the genius not to do. She did not have to do it. As I do. You will allow me that reader, yourselves that. That you better do what you have to do or you shall partake of death.
